Greg's Story

When Greg Stephens was just four years old, he was asked what he wanted to do in life. His answer? “I want to help people get along.” But he couldn’t have known at that age just how prophetic that statement would become. One pivotal moment came when his Dad went to Vietnam and came back a completely different man. He became an evangelical, fire and brimstone preacher with almost cultish viewpoints. To compound the pressure, as Greg was graduating from high school, his Dad informed him that he was on his own to figure out living quarters, college and a career path. Over the next few years, he worked at several different jobs to put himself through Baylor University, including a welder’s helper, janitor, sales rep and selling cemetery property door to door. But each career step he took seemed to reflect the chaos and conflict that was present throughout his life. This path led him to seek the advice of a life coach to help him find his calling.

As they talked about his dreams and life experiences, he recalled his bold statement from childhood and realized that he could help bring people together by becoming a coach, himself. As a result, he embarked on a three year apprenticeship program, where he participated in 1,000 hours of coaching. After that, he created his own course focused on repairing relationships.

As an instructor, he realized that he could illustrate the importance of relationships and communication theories using his own, real-world experiences. That was the moment that prompted him to repair 36 personal relationships in two and a half years... including the one with his father.

Today, Greg helps leaders navigate complex situations and impossible relationships by burning old mindsets and building new bridges. He specializes in helping individuals and corporations clearly communicate in high stakes situations. He starts the relationship repair process by guiding them to a safe space to speak their truth. Next, he identifies the root cause of conflict, designed to provide revelations that bring results. He showcases expertise in human connection through his multiple certifications, including as a Master Trainer, Master Storyteller, and Professional Mediator. He is also the upcoming author of Build New Bridges: The Art of Restoring Impossible Relationships and the host of the A Shot of Inspiration podcast. With over two decades of experience in creating multiple training programs, he is confident that he can help every client achieve self mastery and build new bridges to more meaningful relationships and results.
